Print cards on cardstock. Cut them out. Deal out one card to each family member. Sit in a circle. Starting with the oldest, have each family member answer his or her prompt.

You are the scarecrow two kids built to protect their garden. From the corn rows you can see through the window into their room. What do you say to the kids?

You are the last lonely apple in the barrel of water. You can't imagine why no one has bobbed for you yet. What do you say to get someone to bob for you?

You are a bat who is afraid of heights. Usually it's okay; you just hunt close to the ground. But this year the Halloween Witch needs you to fly in front of the moon. What do you say?

You are a piece of toffee about to be thrown off a Halloween Parade float. You know if you're not caught by a child, you'll be smashed on the pavement. How do you get someone to catch you?

You are a leaf floating lazily along on the wind. You spot a little girl wearing a big witch's hat and realize you're heading right toward the hat's point. How do you get the girl to move so you're not impaled?

You are a monster out to scare kids on Halloween night. Just when you spot a likely couple of kiddies, you see Dracula swooping up behind them, prepared to suck blood. What do you say to the kids?
